WORLD'S-1903 -FAIR.

A FALSE NOTE.

It is a pity that the nobility of union in giving token of grief and respect was marred by the sour fanaticism which would evilly use past party disputes for a supposed momentary advantage of words over Democrats.

It is a pity that the President's body could not go to its resting place before the venomous desire to irritate political opponents broke out in publicly circulated print.

It is a pity that doubt should be cast upon the sincerity of the distinguished mocrats who carried to Canton the tribates of their States and cities; or spoke at memorial meetings the language of respect for the eminent dead, of love of our common country, of faith in God.

The newspapers and men who forced forward at such a time their chronic bigotry are of the kind which give to party contest its worst attributes of hate and falsehood.

It is a pity that such people and newspapers exist to lower the standard of perican conduct.

GARFIELD AND GOEBEL

Yesterday's Globe-Democrat conveys to Democrats a notice to the effect that Republican papers were justified, since Goebel was a bad man, ging to a bad party, in inbelonging to a party, in the point thaming excitable minds to the point of killing the Governor of Kentucky; while Democratic papers must be held responsible for Czolgosz because the ident was a good man and led a good party.

ning is worthy of the Globe Such res Democrat. Whether it is fit for the table occasion through which the nation is passing hardly needs remark.

President McKinley was a good man.

That much is true, regardless of the sion and regardless of party. No ocratic paper of party standing has ever sought to misrepresent his personter. There was no attack upon the honorable conduct of his life; not when he was Major McKinley in Congress or when he was President.

For the rest of the Globe-Democrat's ill-timed bigotry there will be more than one opinion. An essential point is the unted fact that Czolgosz was not in the least influenced by party newspapers. As an anarchist he was bent upon killing a President. If the press had been uniform in supporting the President's administration his motive and his deed would have been the same

In the case of the murdered Governor of Kentucky It was frenzied partisanship, inflamed by party newspapers, which committed the crime.

In the case of Garfield it was frenzied factionism, inflamed by factional newspapers, which committed the crime. The St. Louis Globe-Democrat was among the bitterest partisan assallants of Governor Goebel and among the bitterest factionist assailants of President Garfield. Nobody but a fool could remotely associate Democratic opposition to President McKinley's party policies with the enerchist's pistol shots. The anarchists care no more about American parties than about European court quarrels.

But there was an obvious relation beveca Guiteau and the viliflers of Garfield; and between the uncaught assassin of Goebel and the inflammatory Reublican persecution of the victim.

If the Globe-Democrat's conceptions of newspaper morality permit it to resur-rect its abuse of a dead man in order to point a difference between the Kentucky murder and the shocking crime at Butalo, it has with it the American right of free speech. But very few decent Republicans will feel like rendering aid the cold-blooded business.

THE NEW PRESIDENT.

President Roosevelt now begins his the confidence of the American people in his personal worth and individual intent to enforce the laws and direct the country's destinies for the best good of all.

This confidence in Mr. Roosevelt as an American citizen is felt and expressed by Democrats as well as by Republicans. Probably more than would be the case with any other member of the Republican party, the new President commands the esteem of those who oppose his party's policies and who differ with the dominant organization on certain great issues involving the welfare of the American people. It is felt that President Roosevelt is honest in his sympathies and aspirations. It is believed that his inherent Americanism will compel him to maintain this closeness of touch and kinship of ideals in all his personal acts.

The immediate effect of the friendliness with which President Roosevelt is peneficial. It will give him a signal opportunity to most wisely influence the trend of national affairs. The voters of differing political beliefs have been brought closer together by the death of President McKinley. While there is no relinquishment of honest party differences which go far toward maintaining the healthfulness of the body politic, there is a stronger nationalism of spirit. The President stands for the Government. The Government is of all the people, by all the people, for all the people. The people will loyally acclaim the new President as the First Citizen of the Republic and as their foremost represent ative in the Government, his duty being through the National Congress and interpreted by the courts. President Roosevelt has already done much to strengthen the popular confidence in his ability to properly fill the great office to which he has been called by a great tragedy. The few words which he has spoken since succeeding to the Presidency have been thoughtful and to the point. He has shown that he appreciates the tremendous responsibility now resting upon his shoulders He will receive the loyal support of the American people in an honest endeavor to discharge his responsibility. He is President of all the people. They look to him for that satisfactory performance of his duty the assurance of which is contained in his public record to the present time.

THEY WILL BE WELCOME.

In the event that the sturdy Boers of South Africa, deprived of liberty in what was once their own free country shall show a disposition to emigrate and settle in the United States, they may rest assured of a hearty and comradely welcome.

These brave and self-governing folk have the making of mighty good Americans in them. They are magnificent loneers. Their racial spirit is the spirit of independence. They are a homely and strong breed. Democracy is in their very souls. A simple plety adds to their stanchness of moral fiber. In many of their characteristics they resemble the Slough of Despond. The consequent colonial Americans who won our own independence from Great Britain and who established the American Govern day's political news. It is, as stated, who established the American Government, now the world's foremost Government.

There is no better strain of blood to be gained through immigration than would come into the American body with the Boers of the Transvaal and Orange Free State. They should be encouraged to settle in this country. They would make admirable citizens.

NOT AT ALL.

St. Louis does not understand what expression in its editorial columns to the following:

the following:

It appears that there is still some doubt as to the materialization in 1982, or in any other year, of the Louisiana Purchase Centennial Exposition. Although the city of St. Louis, the State of Missouri, the Congress of the United States, and other departments of the National Government have responded to the call for appropriations; although Commissioners and other officials have for more than six months been engaged in preparation for the event; although foreign nations have been formally invited to send exhibits, and the site has been accepted, and work on the grounds has been inaugurated, the shadow of a doubt still hangs over the gigantic enterprise. coubt still hangs over the gigantic enterprise.

The Post hopes for the dissipation of the charge and for the most energetic prosecution of the control of t scalow and for the most energetic presention of the immene work for whose consummation St. Louis stands pledged to the United States and the civilized world. But, it seems to be a fact that the whole grand scheme hangs on the result of a special election to be held in St. Louis on the EE of October. On that day, the voters of the zea of octooes, on that may, the voters of that municipality will decide for or against cer-tain Charter smendments, and that decision in-volves the question whether or not St. Louis can put herself in readiness for consummating fer stupendous project.

Continuing, the Post quotes The Republic in detailing some of the needs of the municipality, such as new eleemoysnary institutions, repaired sewers and streets, etc. Then it says:

Under existing conditions, or under any con-citions that can exist without the adoption of the proposed Charter amendments, St. Louis will hold no World's Exposition. She will not care to display for miseries to all nations.

Nothing has been said or done that would warrant the claim that the fate of the World's Fair depends on the passage of the Charter amendments. Even if the Charter amendments were defeated by a unanimous vote-as they will not be-the Louisiana Purchase Centennial Exposition would still be held. There is no "shadow of a doubt." Having determined to hold a gigantic

This city is even now a machine that will furnish a going ahead with the reconstruction of the game. in better shape to hold such an exposistreets and the building of boulevards. The sewerage system of St. Louis is second only to that of Paris. Work has been begun on a new City Hospital.

That is not enough for the ideals ing this year's exhibition better than which this city holds for the New St. Louis. The building of the World's Fair has stirred the municipal spirit as never before. It is proposed to make the reconstruction of streets easier on the property owners by equalizing the expense. The sewers need repairs and extensions to make them the best in the world. Additional room must be provided for the wards of the city.

Under the organic law-otherwise the Charter-the money for these purpose cannot be raised without working injustice to a large portion of the tax-payers. It is proposed by the amusi-ments to change this state of affairs.

ry about the new party are the Republicans who will have to put up their tion. St. Louis intends to show the men engaged in that work that the municipality appreciates its own duties.

St. Louis has done everything possible for the World's Fair enterprise. It has voted $5,000,000 bonds and raised administration of American affairs with $5,000,000 more by private subscription. All the legislation asked by the Exposition directors has been passed. A site has been furnished. Nothing more, ab solutely nothing more, can be done for the World's Fair by St. Louis, because nothing more is asked. Contracts for the construction of the main buildings of the Exposition will be let December 1. The Fair will open May 1, 1903, as originally planned. Nothing but an adverse Providence can prevent this consummation. The Charter amendments will pass, but they will not affect the World's Fair one way or the other. The Washington Post, in all fairness to itself, its readers and the World's Fair, will do well to correct the wrong impression.

FUN AND FIGHTING.

There is a piquant mingling of entertainment and instruction in the current developments of Republican dissension in St. Louis. The spectacle is relished regarded by all the people can be only by happy souls gifted with the knack of finding sermons in stones, books in the running brooks and good in everything.

Although the local Republicans themselves fall to perceive either the humor or the pathos of their Kilkenny-cat spasms of late, they cannot exactly resent the fact of a delighted perception by others. The gayety of nations is largely dependent upon the pleasure which one nation finds in laughing at the absurdities of another nation. This truth applies with equal force to the gayety of political parties. St. Louis Republicans are playing a star part just now in enhancing the gayety of local politics.

In many minds there is an amused suspicion that at least one Republican in St. Louis sees the funny side of the existing situation. It will be remembered that, prior to the campaigns of November, 1900, and April, 1901, the Globe-Democrat celebrated the "elimination" of Chauncey I. Filley as a local Republican leader. Mr. Filley had frequently led his party to victory, but he was hated by the Globe because he did not approve the Globe's methods any more than he liked the Globe's Ziegenhein associates.

So, at the behest of the Globe and Ziegenhein, Mr. Filley was "eliminated" and the Globe took his place as leader The result was a cataclysm of Republican disaster. The party was snowed under in the State election. In the city election which followed it lost St. Louis until then a Republican stronghold for years. It went so far up toward the headwaters of Salt River that only a faint wall could be heard from it-distant, mournful, shivery in its desolation, like "the wolf's long howl on Onalaska's shore." The wall came from the Globe. It claimed that the election had been stolen. The Globe had to claim this in order to offer some sort of excuse for the calamities attendant upon its leadership of its party.

And now the local Republican organization is fleeing from the hoodoo of Globe-Democrat leadership, and endeavoring to arrange for a guidance which shall not again land it neck-deep in the both entertaining and instructive. The final result, it is hoped by all lovers of good government, will be that the Globe Democrat is enabled to keep its party in permanent encampment on the banks of Salt River. St. Louis is safe so long as this encampment is maintained.

No one has ever denied that Senator William A. Clark knows a good thing when he sees it. His contribution of $25,000 and offer to duplicate all other subscriptions for the Montana exhibit at induced the Washington Post to give the World's Fair shows that he is keeping posted on the value of expositions.

Nowadays the Globe-Democrat speaks of the late James A. Garfield as "the martyred President." Up to the day of his assassination by the Globe's fellow-Stalwart, Guiteau, it called him a "dunghill," "h-l raiser," "political autocrat' and "symbol of petty malice."

For the first time in the history of the United States, every telegraph instrument in the country was "dead" for five minutes. In his last speech, delivered at the Pan-American, President McKinley paid special tribute to this power of nunication.

Globe-Democrat indecency in hounding President Garfield to the day of his death for political profit is only equaled by Globe-Democrat indecency in attempting to use President McKinley's death for political profit. .

If President Roosevelt conducts himself as well during the next three years as he has done for the past fortnight Democrats and Republicans will continue to praise his good judgment.

St. Louisans take pleasure in watch ing the gradual spread of newly constructed streets. The New St. Louis will be an accomplished fact when the World's Fair opens.

One of the things that Missourians remember concerning the finances of Missouri is the fact that the schools of the State received $100,000 more this year Chauncey L Filley has captured the posed that he was "eliminated." He is a lively political corpse at all stages of St. Louis County is noted for the ex ellence of its annual fairs. The drought has had only the effect of makever before. Party feeling was lost in paying respect to the dead President. The place of honor given the Missouri delegation at the Canton obsequies was eloquent evidence.

There can be no temporizing with anarchists. Every State must make it so warm for the breed that their lives will not be comfortable in this country.

Archbishop Kain has addressed a circular letter to each priest in the archdlocese of St. Louis, calling attention to the Eucharistic Congress, to be held in St. Louis on October 15, 16 and 17.

Miss Annie N. Brown-Sendager of Edinburgh, Scotland, who is staying at the Terminal Hotel, crossed the Atlantic to join her fiance, Captain Reginald F. Wall, an English army officer and a member of the North American Commission which was sent to the United States at the opening of the Boer war to purchase supplies for the army in the field.

The couple met in St. Louis Thursday, Yesterday they proceeded to the City Hall and obtained a marriage license. The ceremony had not been performed last night, and it had not been decided when or where it would be performed.

Captain Wall, whose commanding officer in the United States is Colonel De Burgh, with his superior has been making his headquarters in Kansas City, Mo. He arrived from the East Thursday afternoon,

The couple have been engaged for several years. Their union was to have been celebrated on Captain Wall's return to England. But his stay in this country was prolonged, and at the present time he is uncertain when the order to return home will come. The fact that several of Miss Brown-Sendager's friends had planned a visit to the United States offered a solution of the problem. They accompanied her on the trip across the ocean and she made the journey from New York to St. Louis alone, Captain Wall's home is in London.

OBJECT TO RAILROAD'S PLANS. Lumbermen File a Remonstrance Against the Burlington.

President A. J. Lang of the St. Louis Lumbermen's Exchange filed a remonstrance yesterday with Acting Mayor Hornsby against the plans of the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railroad Company for tracks along the wharf from North Market street to Dock street.

Members of the exchange say the tracks should be laid twenty feet west of the lines specified in the plans, otherwise the hardwood lumber interests will be jeopardized for lack of wharf space. The plans are now on file with the Board of Public Improvements, pending approval. The remonstrance will also be submitted to the board for consideration.

In his address to these young men the Bishop reminded them that they could not preach the gospel unless they were Christians. Preachers must not make the mistake of thinking that the people are hungering and thirsting for literary effort or for sensational display. PREDICTS A GREAT FAIR.

Commissioner Parker Will Boom St. Louis Exposition in England. REPUBLIC SPECIAL

Washington, Sept. 20.—George F. Parker, former Consul General at Birmingham, who was appointed recently by the St. Louis World's Fair managers Commissioner to the United Kingdom, has been looking into the departments here in the interest of that enterprise. Since his consulship expired he has lived in Birmingham, where he is engaged in business, but will now remove to London and devote all his time to the prosecution of his new task.

Mr. Parker believes that St. Louis is destined to have a highly successful Exposition. He bases this view not only on the sums of money at the disposal of the enterprise, which exceed those ever before gathered for such a purpose, but on the fact that the city is the metropolis of a region that has never been before touched by a great fair. Throughout the Southwest everything gravitates toward St. Louis, and the people will welcome an opportunity to pass a week in that city.

Mr. Parker thinks the British Government will make a creditable exhibit, comparing favorably with that et Chicago. In the ten years between the two expositions there has been a notable advance in competition among the manufacturing nations for the trade of the world; this competition leads to generous advertising and a World's Fair is really a great advertising enterprise.

The ladies of the Publication Committee. The ladies of the party spent the forenon viewing the city from the Union Trust building observatory, visiting the big stores and enjoying a trolley excursion to points of interest.

The auction promoted by the ladies yesterday and presided over by Mrs. Otto F. Claus of St. Louis as chairman, and Miss Anna Hinrich of St. Louis as auctioneer. was a great success. Over 250 parcels had been prepared and labeled so that buyers could only guess at their contents, and the smartest guessers were surprised. As an instance, a package labeled "The President's First Home." proved to be a tiny cradie. Another, labeled "A Paradise on Earth," was undone only to disclose a pair of dice. The bargain that created most meriment was the sale of "An Order for a Husband." Former President John F. Patton of York, Pa., had been carefully and neatly wrapped and tied with ribbons and was duly delivered to the purchaser. In the evening 16 ladies of the party attended the play at the Olympic Theater.

The educational and legislative section disposed of a large amount of work yesterday. Chairman C. B. Lowe and Secretary J. A. Koch presented reports. Harry B. Mason of Detroit, Mich., read a paper on "A New Economic Order in Pharmacy."
